

Table 1: Records with Genealogical Information

| Type of Record | Description | Information in Record |
|--|--|--|
| Vital Records – Created by Governments | This includes the recording of births, marriages and death by towns or states. Not until the twentieth century in the U.S. did government record keeping of vital events become universal. | Name, date, place and sometimes parent's names, including mother's maiden name |
| Vital Records – Created by Religious Institutions | Records kept by religious institutions of parishioners, including marriage certificates, baptisms, confirmations, burials, birth records, Hebrew School attendance, and other materials. | Same as above, plus witnesses to the event |
| Vital Records – Created by Families | Bible records | Name and date and sometimes place |
| Census | US Census: Every ten years beginning in 1790. Until 1850, the census only listed the head of household and tabulated the ages of household members by age categories. From 1850 onward, the census became a much more useful source of genealogical information. State Census: Some states conducted their own censuses in between federal census years. | Name, age, and gender of each family member, occupation, birthplace and other information, depending on year |
| Cemeteries | Tombstones vary in the amount of information captured. Online websites such as Findagrave.com may include transcriptions of obituaries or biographical information in addition to a photo of the tombstone. | Name, date of birth, date of death. Sometimes the maiden name and the place of birth are included. |

|--|--|---|
| Immigration and Emigration Records | Records generated in tracking individuals arriving or departing a country. Includes ship passenger lists, border crossing records, and passport applications. | Few lists pre-1820. From 1820-1893 – just the name, age, gender and country of origin were recorded. Beginning in 1893 more extensive information such as last residence and marital status were captured. Passport applications typically include name, date and place of birth. |
| Naturalization and Citizenship Records | Records generated through the process of an individual applying for and becoming a citizen of a country. Beginning in 1790 the US naturalization process required two steps. After living in the U.S. for at least two years a person could file a declaration of intent to become a citizen, followed three years later by a petition for naturalization. The final certificate was issued based on the petition. | Name, nationality, date and place of birth, port and date of arrival. After 1907, may find spouses name, date and place of birth as well as information about children. |
| Land and Property | Records generated by the purchase and sale of land, such as warrants, deeds and mortgages. In the colonial period, most rural heads of house owned land. | Name, name of wife, names of family members, names of neighbors. Some states, such as Maryland, gave parcels of land names such as "Peace," or "Dorsey's Folly," which makes tracing ownership across generations somewhat easier. |
| Probate | Records generated by the process of settling an estate after death. If a person made a will, they are said to have died "testate;" without a will, "intestate." | Wills mention relationships: husband, wife, children. |
| Taxation | Records generated to track receipt of taxes paid to government. | Name, property. In colonial periods, the presence of a name on a list signified the person was of legal age (16, 18 or 21 depending on the colony). |

|------------|---|--|
| Military | Records generated as a result of an individual's involvement in the armed forces, including draft registration cards, service records, pension records, and bounty land records | Draft: Name, age, place of birth, occupation, residence. Service: Name, age, dates of service Pension: Name, date of birth, death, family members. |
| Newspapers | Birth, marriage and death notices are the principle uses of newspapers by genealogists although some ancestors generate news articles. | Names, dates of events, location, family members. |

Table 2: Other Sources of Genealogical Information

| Source | Description | Information |
|----------------------|--|---|
| Compiled genealogies | Published family histories | Descendants, lineage. Some compiled genealogies have been carefully documented, others present data without source citations and must be treated as finding aids. |
| Local Histories | Histories of towns, counties, and states provide a wealth of useful information for genealogists. They describe the early settlement of an area and describe the founding of churches, schools, and businesses. Many histories include lists of pioneers, soldiers, and civil officials. Prominent citizens receive a biographical write-up. | Names, relationships, places, occupations. These histories may place your ancestor in an area before the ancestor left a record. |
| Biographies | Life histories of prominent people | Names, relationships, migration patterns, occupations, residences. |

Tips

Start your research with the U.S. Federal census. The census will anchor your ancestor to a place and time and give you clues about family relationships.
